HEMEROCALLIS

(Daylilies)

In our many years of experience in growing plants of all kinds, we find that daylilies have given us more pleasure for our money with less care than any other plants we have ever known. The wide color scheme, the long period of blooming by growing different varieties, the fact that they're almost disease free, all these favorable points tend to make daylilies our favorite plants. Fertilizing is not a must but as with most plants, produces better results. A well aerated soil, rich in humus with a good dressing of barnyard manure will pay big dividends. Here in the south mulching is not absolutely necessary, however, it helps keep the moisture in the ground in case of a drouth, as well as keeping weeds out. Since daylilies make roots near the surface of the earth cultivation is eliminated, another point in their favor, as well as the fact that they combine so beautifully with so many other plants and are so simple to move. There is so much to be said in their favor that a whole history could be written.

We have been in the general nursery business for approximately 16 years. Being interested in growing plants makes one vulnerable to a growing desire for anything new in that line, especially in plants that are applicable anywhere, in any soil. Hence, our first interest in daylilies. We were first attracted by them as a plant highly desirable in giving the finishing touch to landscaping jobs. Therefore, we started with mass planting of the cheaper varieties. Gradually we acquired better and more expensive varieties. With the help of our good friend Mrs. Dave P. Clark, formerly of Baton Rouge, now of Metairie, La., a veteran in the daylily field, we were able to steer away from a lot of varieties on the market, and obtain varieties tested and proven, gradually building up a collection any grower should be proud of.

We have read in the notes of some of the older members of the Hemerocallis Society that they are like weeds. We quite agree with them, only beauty has been added. Daylilies here in Louisiana usually can be planted 12 months out of the year. However, we get best results by planting during late summer and early spring. Simply make sure you buy from a reliable grower and plant your scone so as to spread the roots in a well pulverized soil with at least 1 inch of packed dirt over the utmost upper roots, water well, and in no time at all you will have a growing plant. Daylilies will grow without care of any kind but will respond wonderfully to care as all plants will. From our observation we find that they grow well in full sun or partial shade. Watering right after separating and transplanting is necessary of course, and watering when forming buds produces more buds and larger blooms. Some of the darker varieties, as well as the dainty pinks do better in partial shade.

We welcome visitors any time. Plan to visit our humble garden several times a year, you will never be disappointed. It will be a pleasure to show you around. Our daylily display and proven grounds is located in the garden of Mrs. C. G. Simon, 619 Lafayette Street, in the city of Lafayette. Our growing field is located three miles east of Lafayette on U. S. 90 highway to New Orleans, La.

In this area by selecting your varieties you can have daylilies blooming from April through October.

We are now growing approximately 15 acres in daylilies.

Send us your list of hard to get items—we may have what you are looking for.
